

THE NEW INQUIRY

SUBSCRIBE TO TNI

tumblr

NEWSLETTER

Search ...

SEARCH

ESSAYS & REVIEWS

FEATURES

BLOGS

&, MEANWHILE

NEWS

MAGAZINE

ARCHIVE

SHOP

ABOUT

Cat Gut

By CHRISTINE BAUMGARTHUBER

February 13, 2014

Illustration from Good and Bad Cats (1911)

THE AUSTERITY
KITCHEN
BY CHRISTINE
BAUMGARTHUBER

Where the alimentary is elementary.

Previously by
CHRISTINE BAUMGARTHUBER

Coweye Burgers and Plastic Malts

Dinner with Caligula

A Contrary Image of Steaming Excrement

"A fellow, a shepherd at Beverley, in Yorkshire, about eleven years ago, for a bet of five pounds, was produced, who was to devour a living cat. The one produced was a large black tomcat, which had not been fed for the purpose; but was chosen, as being the largest in that neighborhood. The day appointed was the fair-day at Beverley. The parties met. The man produced was a raw-boned fellow, about forty. The cat was then given to him; on which he took hold of his four legs with one hand, and closing his mouth with the other, he killed him by biting his head to pieces immediately, and in less than a quarter of an hour, devoured every part of the cat, tail, legs, claws, bones, and everything. The man who laid the wager gave the fellow two guineas for doing it, and the shepherd appeared perfectly satisfied with the reward. — After he had done it, he walked about the fair the whole afternoon, and appeared neither sick nor sorry. He took no emetic, nor had this repast any effect on him whatever." —From "Cat Eaters," in The Portfolio of Entertaining and Instructive Varieties (ca. 1824)

TIDBIT

SUPPORT TNI

SUBMIT

TERMS OF USE

CONTACT US